History of the Inn

Plaine Hill is situated prominently at the southern approach to Woodstock Hill. The Inn's main house, originally constructed in 1816 by John Truesdell for William Bowen, has undergone a number of reconstructions, renovations, and additions over the years. As it appears today, the massive clapboard house has a steeply pitched hip roof, and dormers on all faces. The main entrance is marked by a segmental pediment, which, because of an addition to the north facade, is asymmetrically placed. A large attached barn, which extended to the south of the main house, recently collapsed and was removed, although there are plans to rebuild it in the future. There is also a small dwelling on the property to the south of the main house. Built in 1900 and renovated in 1987, the Cottage has a center chimney, two small dormers on the front, and a shed dormer across the full length of the back.

William Bowen, for whom the 1816 house was built, was a descendant of Henry Bowen, one of the thirteen "Goers" who settled Woodstock in 1686, and was the grandfather of Henry C. Bowen who built nearby Roseland Cottage.

William Bowen was, in his own right, a selectman of Woodstock, a founder of Woodstock Academy, a tavern keeper and the town's first postmaster. Following his death, the property passed to his son, Colonel Matthew Bowen, and then to his son, Andrew Williams Bowen, who sold it to his cousin, Henry C. Bowen. The Bowen family connection continued through Henry C. Bowen's son, Herbert W. Bowen, a diplomat, who retired to Woodstock in the early part of the twentieth century, and Gardner Richardson, Herbert Bowen's nephew.

The property remained in the Bowen family until after the death of Gardner Richardson's widow, Dorothea, who bequeathed the farm to the University of Connecticut in 1981 as a memorial to Richardson's son, Lt. Peter Bowen Richardson, USAF, who was killed in the Korean War. The farm was returned to the family in 1985, and the buildings and adjacent land were subsequently sold to a consortium of investors who converted the main house and barn to use as an inn and restaurant, known as "The Inn at Woodstock Hill." Most of the farmland remains in the Bowen family as it has for three centuries. Plaine Hill is listed on the National Register of Historic Places.

Commitment to the Environment

We at the Inn at Woodstock Hill feel blessed to share this quiet, relaxing retreat with its woods, lawn and gardens. Places like this are becoming ever-rarer in a crowded world and thus more precious. We try to do all we can to minimize our impact on the natural world, so that future generations can enjoy it too.

Recycling bins are provided in your room. Newspaper, office paper, cardboard, metal, glass, and plastic can be placed in your bin.

Water and energy are finite natural resources. If you don't need your towels replaced, you can let us know by hanging up your used towels. If you leave the room for an excursion, you can minimize your environmental impact by shutting off unnecessary lights and putting the A/C or heat on a low setting.

Environmental Policy

We at the Inn at Woodstock Hill are committed to providing a beautiful and functional facility while striving to do all we can to minimize our impact on the environment.

The Inn at Woodstock Hill strives to:

- Use local and organic food whenever possible. We also grow some of our own herbs, flowers, vegetables, fruits, and berries.
- Purchase recycled and reusable office products and toiletries.
- Reduce energy usage.
- Conserve water consumption.
- Decrease pollution by avoiding use of hazardous materials and products, seek substitutes when feasible and take all reasonable steps to protect human health and the environment.
- Communicate our environmental commitment to clients, guests and public to encourage them to support our efforts. If you have suggestions for how we can improve our conservation efforts, please include comments at the end of your stay at the Inn.
- Promote environmental awareness among our employees and encourage them to work in an environmentally responsible manner with a firm commitment to train, educate and inform our employees about environmental issues that may affect their work.

Thank you so much for helping the Inn at Woodstock Hill to be a green business!
